Abstract

The debate on the feasibility, the use and the contents of a code of EU administrative procedures has intensified since the entry into force of the Lisbon Treaty, which introduced art. 298 TFEU, a provision that could be relied upon as the legal basis for the adoption of an EU codification regulation. The 'European Code of Good Administrative Behaviour', drafted by the European Ombudsman, and endorsed by the European Parliament in September 2001 and the adoption of the European Parliament legislative initiative resolution of 15 January 2013 stimulated academic debate on the issue. In this context, the PRIN project 2012 (2012SAM3KM) financed by Italian Government, which involved six Universities, sought to consolidate and further develop efforts undertaken in Italy in the framework of the network of academics, known as ReNEUAL, which started working in 2010. The research unit of Naples, coordinated by Prof. Roberto Mastroianni, in particular assessed the issues related to the legal basis for the adoption of a codification regulation and the sources of inspiration for the recognition of common procedural rules. The workshop seeks to present the results of the PRIN research and to further stimulate academic debate in the light of the adoption by the European Parliament, in 2016, of resolution 9 June 2016 laying down the proposal for a regulation for an open, efficient and independent EU administration (2016/2610(RSP)).
